Exceeding Australian Standards

Affinity Security Products not only provide the highest level of protection against intruders and exceed the relevant Australian and industry standards for security, but protect your family against the spread of fire, bushfire, cyclone and more.

Security Testing

AS 5039 – (Current) & AS 5041 (Current)

Affinity Security Products undergo a rigorous security testing regime of dynamic impact tests, jemmy tests and knife shear tests to make sure the fundamental strength and structural integrity of the manufactured security product is preserved.

Knife Shear Test

AS 5039 – (Current) & AS 5041 (Current)

Affinity Security Products are tested for durability and strength by subjecting the material to a regulated physical cutting test, where a knife is drawn across the mesh multiple times.

Fire Attenuation Test

AS 1530.4 – (Current), Appendix B7

When exposed to an average incident radiant heat level of 39.7kW/m² the resultant average transmitted radiant heat level was 16.3kW/m² or a reduction by 41%.

Bushfire Test

AS 1530.8.1 – (Current)

Affinity Security Products have been independently tested to the requirements of BAL40 (Bushfire Attack Level) and can be used in bushfire prone areas.

Cyclonic Missile Impacts

AS 1170.2 – (Current), Clause 5.3.2

Affinity stainless steel mesh has been tested to this standard, resisting the 4kg, 100mm x 50mm timber projected at 15m/s.

Cyclonic Missile Impacts

AS 1170.2 – (Current)

QLD Government: Design Guidelines for Australian Public Cyclone Shelters 2002, Department of Health: Western Australia Health Facility Guidelines for Engineering Services 2006. Affinity Security Products in stainless steel mesh have also been tested to and passed the more demanding testing regime of this Standard. The same piece of timber is propelled into the mesh at the faster speed of 20m/s followed steel ball bearings of 8mm diameter cross section, projected at 30m/s at any angle.
